After a while, Joseph became Potiphar's ruler, in charge of storing the food. One day the brothers came to Potiphar to ask for food. Joseph played tricks on them, before he forgave them, and they all moved to live with him.

Jacob had eleven sons, which were all good, but Joseph, Jacob's youngest son was Jacob's favourite because he helped his dad so much. Jacob showed he loved Joseph by buying him a multicoloured coat.

The coat annoyed his brothers, so one night they decided to send Joseph away with a passing camel train. They told Joseph to go and to never come back again. They told Jacob, Joseph had been killed by a wolf.

The camel train eventually found its way to the city where Potiphar was in charge. One night Potiphar had a dream, and after hearing Joseph could read dreams, he sent for Joseph. Joseph told Pharaoh about the dream.
